SPRING PICNIC POTLUCK - 17 MAY 2008

by Charlie Penn

The warm weather is almost here so it is time for the 4th Annual AFTAC Spring Picnic, where burgers are dropped but wiped off clean and the dogs are wagging their tails. The past picnics have been a huge success with the food undercooked or burnt but the camaraderie second to none. The Association will provide the burgers, dogs, condiments, paper plates, soft drinks and water. (Adult beverages will not be provided, but you may certainly bring your own; we will have ice chests for your beverages). You're asked to provide the desserts, side dishes and chips & dips and to sign up for this festive event so we know how many Rolaids to provide. The venue is covered and will accommodate over 100 hungry, belligerent folks. Bring your war stories, appetite, pot-luck dish, camera and some sort of decorum for this once-a-year extravaganza. (If you are a no-show you will be badmouthed). See you there!!! *Note: Sign-up requested so we know how much to buy.

So what are the vitals on this gala event?

'88 FLOODS JUST ONE FOND MEMORY FOR CENTRE'S YANKEE.

by Daniel Burk Haslett

Sir,- The two and a half years that I lived in the Alice represent some of the most exciting and enjoyable years of my life. I have many fond memories of the friends, food, and sites that I left behind when I returned to the United States. I was assigned to Detachment 421, known locally as "The Det", back in October of 1987. I flew into town with virtually no information about Alice Springs. Sure, I had read all about this cattle town in the middle of the outback and seen the pictures, but the materials that I was reading dated back to 1977 and 1967 respectively! Since I had just spent the last eight months on US Air Force installations in the States, the idea of being transferred to a remote detachment, where you don't even wear uniforms seemed exciting and full of mystery. The assignment description said that I would have to "live off the local economy" and buy and cook my own food, and I relished the opportunity. Would I have to buy myself a washer? Rent an apartment? Every picture seemed to show a bright red, dirt road: based on this information, I sold my Chevy Camaro, thinking that everyone in the Alice must surely use four-wheel drive!

When I got off the airplane at the Alice Springs Airport, I was met by most of the whole detachment: Colonel David Ebersole, Harold Hughes, Dan Thompson, and Ray Baney, just to name a few. Detachment 421, located just across the street from the RSL club, is also known amongst the Australian government as the Joint Geological and Geophysical Research Station (JGGRS). This seismic station is a joint venture between the United States and Australia, and the data from the seismic array located just north east of Alice Springs is sent real-time via satellite to both Canberra, and to Cocoa Beach, Florida. The primary mission was the detection of underground nuclear explosions. The Australian Bureau of Mineral Resources (BMR) had a small office that used their seismic stations for the detection of underground nuclear tests, as did the Americans. The US government assigned the mission of detecting these explosions to the US Air Force Technical Applications Center (AFTAC). AFTAC has the charge of monitoring safeguard "D" of the 1963 limited test ban treaty. AFTAC monitors the planet to watch for any nuclear explosions in order to see if any of the cooperating countries violate the treaty. Australia did the same thing through the BMR, through its own seismic stations as well as JGGRS in Alice Springs. The Det was established in Alice Springs in 1955, and US personnel assigned there have always been encouraged to take a positive and active role in the community. My job was that of station operator. I was one of the team members that actually studied the seismographic data. I analyzed the data and catalogued the earthquakes.

Alice Springs sits atop a large, rocky plate that is very stable. As such, it is a nice place to put a seismic station for the purposes of studying regional seismic events. The station can pick up earthquakes from all over the world. About once every 15 minutes or so, a small earthquake would emanate from the Fiji island area. Well over 99 per cent of all small earthquakes occur deep enough in the earth that no one ever feels them. Yet, sometimes these earthquakes occur near the surface, and people feel them. Back in early 1988, an earthquake occurred abut 25 km southwest of Tennant Creek. We were sitting around the Det when it hit. A low, swaying sensation went through the building and our sensors went mad. Seismometers are designed to pick up minute ground motion generated by earthquakes from the other side of the world, not by earthquakes that are essentially in your back yard. It is somewhat akin to shouting into your doctor's stethoscope! Thus, our station was absolutely swamped by the seismic waves. Most of us were in the back of the recreational center, and as soon as we realized that an earthquake had passed through, we headed to the office. When you are logging an earthquake series, you become very busy indeed. Later on in the month, I took a trip with the pastor of the Alice Springs Lutheran Church to Tennant Creek. Pastor Peter Thamm had a parish that spread across most of the Territory. Since I was then attending the Lutheran Church, I tagged along and met some of his parishioners. We stopped by the seismic fault line on the way back and saw where the quake had kinked up a high-pressure natural gas line. It's a wonder and a credit to the welders and engineers that the line did not explode! Gas workers dug up the line, and painstakingly placed it on sand bags so that any subsequent aftershocks wouldn't cause additional damage.

Then, there was that flood. I've only seen rain like that once before: eight or nine inches in 24 hours. Nearly an entire season's worth of rain for the Alice. When I looked out my window in the morning, I could see the Charles River cresting the banks and creeping onto the detachment grounds. When the water reached our staff house a couple of hours later, I decided it was time to move the motorcycle and the car. Well, I put the car, a white 1970 Ford Fairlane, up behind the RSL: since I didn't want to inconvenience anyone, I moved it off the bitumen and onto the dirt. That was a mistake. That red dirt had turned to quicksand, and the car sunk practically to the floorboards! Oh well. At least it'd stay put that way. The Charles and Todd rivers became a raging torrent and they crested at the same time. Our detachment was at ground zero, where the two rivers meet. The river carried away anything that was not lashed down. It destroyed the fence, and deposited half a meter of sand on top of the lawn in places. It was quite an adventure, I must say. Our staff house was filled with water, but the overall damage was minimal. When the flood was finished, there were many people a lot worse off than us.

Something that I really cherished about Alice Springs was the sense of freedom: I used to lash a blanket and a bottle of water to the motorcycle, and just drive out of town, usually at night. We'd drive 15, 20 miles or so, turn left, and drive out into the bush. We'd lay down the blanket, and look up at the stars. One of my most favorite places to go at night was the rock carvings south of town. There was this claypan to the north of the rock carvings, and late at night, the moon would shine off the dried clay as if it were covered with water. You could listen for hours and not hear, nor see, any other sign of human activity. It was like being in your own private world. The 10,000 year old carvings added a sense of mystery to the site, and the stars above gave you a sense of space. I'd lay the blanket either on the claypan surface, or at the base of the rock. I would lay on the blanket, wide awake at 2am, and stare at the stars. The stars in the southern hemisphere are most striking. There is nothing that parallels it in the northern hemisphere, except maybe the northern lights. Once in a while you could even see a satellite go whizzing by. That would be about the only sign of mankind I would see when out there. It was very peaceful, and I have never experienced anything like it since.

These are just some of my memories of the Alice. I hope some day that I can return with my family and share these experiences with them. Daniel Burk Haslett, Michigan, USA

DEPOT STORY FROM THE 60's

by Frank Calenda

I'm SMSgt Frank Calenda, Retired. I recently was provided a web version of your newsletter. I was stationed at Depot in 1966, working in the Q System Shop. Much of my assignment there involved traveling to exotic places (??) for surveys and installing the Q machines. I worked for Mike Sepelyac and Bill Sears during that time.

This tale may be considered B.S. (barely substantiated) but I can tell you it's true. Cross my heart and hope to die. This story is really about a young airman by the name of Brad Golithon, who began his AFTAC career in the airborne system there at Sacramento. He was a filter changer, but I never knew him, or even knew of him, until one morning when I reported to work. There was Brad, sitting in front of my desk, with a smile that I would see many more times and come to understand that this particular smile usually meant something not very good had happened.

It seems that the previous day, Airman Golithon was called and asked to, "Grab his brief case containing the filter papers, and get to the flight line for an immediate mission". Being the totally clear minded, dedicated AFTAC killer that he was, he did just that, and from what he told me that morning, he arrived at the plane in record time. Off they went and flew for whatever time it took them to get over their area of interest. Once there the flight commander radioed back that Brad could start his work. Upon opening his brief case, one of two identicals he owned, he found that the one he had grabbed contained the remnants of the previous days lunch along with a Playboy magazine or two. Immediately upon realizing that these items wouldn't accomplish his very important mission, he called back to the pilot and said, "Sir, you won't believe this, but...... Evidentially the pilot did believe him because Brad related to me that the aircraft took an immediate banking action and, deep down inside himself, he felt that they might be returning to Sacramento. He also told me that there were no additional conversations between him and the flight commander, or by any of the other crew for that matter. He continued his story by telling me that once landed, the pilot promptly left the plane and proceeded to the nearest phone where he placed something more than a courtesy call to the base commander. The gist of the conversation was something like, "I never want to see, talk or know anything more about Airman Golithan again".

I guess the commander realized the validity of the pilot's request because the next day, Brad was assigned to me in the Q shop. Good Lord, did that ever start a series of B.S. tale happenings. Brad worked for me for the rest of my stay at depot. He provided me with at least four more stories that immediately come to mind and I'll more than likely share them with you in the near future. Good old Brad left the military and became a Fremont police officer and a small aircraft pilot himself, but he never messed with filter papers again. Sadly, a sickness did him in a number of years ago and he's no longer with us. I can, on any one day, sit back with a cold beer and think of him and all the happy, funny things he did when he was alive. He was really guite a guy. Frank Kevin Anderson Email: 23 Dec 2007. Hi All, I hope you're all enjoying the holiday season. I received a letter from Jane at the orphanage (Chechon, Korea) and she said Camp Long is closing next year (no one told me) but the Det will stay but there will no longer be a commander, Jane is doing fine and has no health issues at the moment. She is 70 plus now and she is still pretty much working full time. Heck, she built another three-story building on her property. Cheers all... Boomer boomerkja@yahoo.com Editor's Note: Those of you who would like a copy of Jane's Christmas newsletter, just email me.

Jan McKeel Email: 7 Mar 2008. This is going to be tuff for me, but I must inform you that George died this morning (3/7/08) at 2:31 a.m. in Yuma. Apparently he had respiratory failure. The cause of death will be determined after an autopsy this afternoon. I'm going to have him cremated (per his wishes) but will hold a Memorial in Paradise at the Moose Lodge and the VFW in North Highlands at a later date. I'll be leaving Yuma around the 16th of this month (maybe sooner) so I can get his affairs (and mine) in order. If you could spread the unfortunate news to people that knew George -- and I have no way of contacting -- I would be greatly appreciated. He was cantankerous, but loveable. I'll miss him.... Jan
